Personality -

Noko is very passionate about his work, and does not hold off on any details when asked. He opts for a much more happy go lucky type beat. Not caring much for boundaries, as he struggles to notice them, Noko is very sociable, even to the most standoffish of people. He's also not the type to hold back her punches.

He is sympathetic towards those down on their luck, and tries to help them in what way he can.

Backstory -

Noko was a normal orphaned child in the Archipelagos Sea who enjoyed tinkering with various gadgets and mechanisms. He played with other kids and made bonds with those who would later become a part of his delinquent group, however his best friend at the time wasn't one of them. Kali was a kid a few years older than Noko, who focused on justice, righting what was wrong and paying actions forward. Kali was the one who mediated between the kids and taught Noko what it meant to do good.

Both Noko and Kali parent's (they are not siblings) were navy soldiers who had died when they both were young under the same circumstances. However these circumstances weren't elaborated on by the soldiers who returned with empty caskets, leaving the two without parents. They were taken in by the island residents and everyone knew of the two of them and their antics and friendship.

His carefree life would be shaken when he was 10, a squadron of navy soldiers would take up residence in the village, as they believed that the village was housing criminals. The villagers would be interrogated, but the soldiers didn't get the information they were looking for, and they held a stronghold over the village, quartering within their homes and taking their food while on the look for a criminal that might have never been there in the first place.

Eventually the tension between the soldiers and the villagers were high, but in Noko's view, the adults in the village were too scared to do anything, so he devised a plan to disrupt the information that the soldiers were receiving and make it seem so the criminal was at a different location. However Noko was caught, the navy labeled him a conspirator, and he got his arm cut off as a result. This led to the village going against the navy however and finally driving them out of the island. What Noko couldn't understand was the fact that Kali left with them, and he's been questioning that ever since.

Motivation -

Noko wants to confront his childhood friend, Kali, for switching to "the other side," but doesn't have the capacity to do this as a regular citizen. So he became a pirate to rise in notoriety so that he can confront Kali and question what they have become.
